

Holiday Hiccups

A personalized tale!

Once upon a holiday season, [_____] and [_____] were so excited, they could hardly sit still! They'd written their letters to Santa, practiced their carols, and were waiting for the holiday magic to start.

One chilly morning, they woke up to find that something strange had happened. The holiday lights on the house were flashing all kinds of funny colors—pink, purple, even polka-dotted! [_____] scratched their head and asked, “Are we having a disco Christmas this year?”

Then, they heard a strange noise coming from the kitchen. They tiptoed over, and guess what? The cookies they'd baked the night before were talking! “Eat me! No, eat ME!” cried the gingerbread cookies, jumping around the kitchen. [_____] gasped, “Did our cookies just...come alive?”

Suddenly, the snow outside started falling upward! [_____] and [_____] ran to the window and watched as snowflakes floated up to the sky like bubbles. “Now we'll never make a snowman!” [_____] said with a big sigh. But then, an idea popped into [_____]’s head. “Let’s make a reverse snowman on the ceiling!”

So, the kids tied on their boots, taped some mittens to the ceiling (don’t ask how), and tried to make their upside-down snowman indoors. It looked a little weird, with a carrot nose sticking down and a hat that kept falling off. But they decided it was the funniest snowman ever.

Just when things couldn’t get any stranger, the doorbell rang. They opened the door, and there stood a reindeer in sunglasses and a Hawaiian shirt. “You’re not Santa!” [_____] said, laughing. The reindeer winked and said, “Santa’s taking a beach day, so I’m here to spread the holiday cheer!” He handed them two beach balls and took off with a twinkle in his eye.

By bedtime, [_____] and [_____] were exhausted from their holiday adventure. They looked around at the reverse snowman, the polka-dotted lights, and the cookie crumbs all over the floor, and they laughed. “This might be the silliest holiday ever,” [_____] said with a grin.

And with that, they snuggled up, ready to dream of even more magical, silly surprises.

Let the holiday magic begin!
